I get to choose any five countries in the world that I want to visit, all expenses paid. I'm not joking. Anyway, I'll be in your city for a few hours on the 25th of October and I'd really like to see you. I'll arrive at the central train station at 3:00 pm. Do you think it would be possible to meet up? Could you suggest a nice place near the station where we could meet? I'd prefer somewhere within walking distance. I'm so excited about this trip and I really hope we'll be able to get together. See you soon, Clara.

I wasn't really in the mood for a school event, but I decided to go just out of curiosity. The main speaker was a young man who told us that we must understand that things like the extreme weather conditions in many parts of the world are a warning to us and that we have to change our ways. With great joy and enthusiasm, he announced a new research programme in the North Pole that had the support of many governments and universities. He explained that if we work all together, we have the power to do something to save our planet.

In the past, the Cherokee Indians of North America used to associate colour with the four directions; that is, blue represented north, white represented south, red represented east and black represented west. There four colours had other meanings too; blue meant defeat, white meant happiness, red meant success and black meant death. The Cherokees also used coloured beads to achieve certain goals; they thought, for example, that red beads had the power to help people recover from illness or find love. Black beads were used to ask the “black spirits” to help the Cherokees to win battles.
